The bride and groom tell the Garcias that they do not have to pay for their meal. They say that they are happy to have them there, and that they want them to enjoy themselves.

The Garcias are so grateful. They sit down and enjoy the wedding. They dance and they sing, and they have a wonderful time.

As the wedding is ending, the bride and groom give the Garcias a gift. It is a small, wooden box. The Garcias open the box, and they are surprised to find a check for $1,000.
