In the small town of Zutphen in the Netherlands, there is a restaurant called Fish, Potatoes, John Donkers. It is a simple place, with a menu that changes daily depending on what is fresh at the market. But it is also a place where people come to gather, to share stories, and to laugh.

In this heartwarming and humorous memoir, John Donkers tells the story of his life through the food he has cooked and eaten. From his childhood memories of helping his mother make apple pie to his time spent as a chef in some of the most prestigious restaurants in the world, Donkers shares his passion for food and the people who have made it a part of his life.

At the heart of this book is the relationship between Donkers and his wife, Marleen. Marleen is a talented artist who shares John's love of food and cooking. Together, they have created a home that is filled with warmth, laughter, and delicious meals.

But Fish, Potatoes, John Donkers is more than just a memoir about food. It is also a story about family, friendship, and the importance of community. Donkers writes about the people who have shaped his life, from his parents and siblings to his friends and colleagues. He also writes about the role that food has played in bringing these people together.

Fish, Potatoes, John Donkers is a beautifully written and deeply personal memoir that will appeal to anyone who loves food, family, and friendship. It is a book that will make you laugh, cry, and think about the important things in life.
