However, the internet quickly grew beyond its original purpose, and it soon became a global network that connected people from all walks of life.

Zuckerman argues that the internet has had a profound impact on our lives. He credits the internet with helping to bring about the fall of the Berlin Wall, the rise of democracy in Eastern Europe, and the spread of information and knowledge around the world. He also discusses the ways in which the internet has made it easier for people to stay connected with friends and family, to learn new things, and to access entertainment.

However, Zuckerman also warns of the potential dangers of the internet. He discusses the ways in which the internet can be used to spread misinformation, to divide people, and to control and manipulate others. He also discusses the ways in which the internet can be addictive, and how it can lead to social isolation and depression.
