The Essential Elements

At the core of every novel lies a set of essential elements, each contributing to its narrative structure and impact. 'The Code Anatomy of the Novel' meticulously dissects these elements:

The backbone of a compelling novel, the plot is a carefully crafted sequence of events that unfolds over the course of the story. The intricate web of plot points, rising action, climax, falling action, and resolution keeps readers captivated and eagerly turning pages.

The characters inhabiting a novel are its beating heart. 'The Code Anatomy of the Novel' explores the techniques authors employ to create believable and relatable characters, including their motivations, conflicts, backstory, and relationships.

The setting serves as the atmospheric backdrop for a novel's events. Through evocative descriptions and sensory details, authors transport readers to faraway lands, historical eras, or fantastical realms.

RHETORICAL DEVICES
Alliteration Another name for alliteration is tongue twisters: one after the other share the first few, initial consonant sounds. E.g. She sells seashells on the seashore.	Allusion Every time you make a reference to some places, events, or a person you are making an allusion E.g. I'm not Sherlock Holmes to figure that out.
Amplification Repeating the same word one after the other, combined with an adjective or two makes it seem stronger, more significant. E.g. His face is red, so so red.	Analogy Sometimes the easiest way to explain things is to strike a parallel with some other thing that is quite similar to it E.g. She is as pale as a ghost.
Anaphora Anaphora is defined as repeating a single word or a phrase in successive phrases. E.g. Some glory in their birth, some in their skill, some in their wealth.	Antanagoge An antanagoge is when you combined a positive and a negative statement together E.g. This summer season was dry, but not as dry as the one back in 2012.
Antimetabole Repeating words in verse order is what antimetabole is all about. E.g. Eat to live, not live to eat.	Antiphrasis This device is used for ironic, sarcastic and humoristic effect. It usually makes fun of opposites. E.g. A really ugly painting, such a Mona Lisa, or a very slow person, Usain Bolt
Antithesis Any time you make a connection between two events, people or things you are using this rhetorical device E.g. Love, is ideal; marriage real.	Appositive If you want to describe a noun better, with another noun, you are using appositive E.g. Alexander of Macedonia, master general.
Enumeratio	Enumeratio is when you try to make some sort of point by numbering things one after the other. E.g. The salesgirl lists every feature the item has in an attempt to make you agree with them

Novels often mirror the social and political issues of their time, offering insights and perspectives that resonate deeply with readers.

Art is a form of catharsis
emotional release, purging, cleansing, purifying.

Dorothy Parker

Through vivid storytelling, novels evoke a wide range of emotions, allowing readers to experience and process their own thoughts and feelings.

them it name the less his, because the very words have been uttered by others. There is rest in thus associating oneself with an innumerable multitude who have "cried to God and been answered." The petition in Psalm 86:1 is like that in Psalm 55:2. Psalm 86:2 sounds like a reminiscence of Psalm 25:20; Psalm 86:3 closely resembles Psalm 57:1.

The pleas on which the petitions are grounded are also beautifully breathed together. First, the psalmist asks to be heard because he is afflicted and poor. (compare Psalm 14:17) This need is a valid plea with a faithful God. The sense of it drives us to Him; and our recognition of poverty will want needs underlie all faithful appeal to Him. The second plea is capable of less interpretations. The psalmist says that he is Christ; and that word is by some commentators taken to mean one who exercises, and by others, one who is the subject of, Christ's i.e. lovingkindness. As has been already remarked on Psalm 83, the passive meaning—i.e. one in whom God's lovingkindness is shown—is preferable. Here it is distinctly better than the other. The psalmist is not presenting his own character as a plea, but urging God's gracious relation to him, which, once entered on, pledges God to unchanging confidence in manifesting His lovingkindness. But though the psalmist does not plead his character, he does, in the subsequent pleas, present his faith, his duty and day-long prayers, and his lifting of his desires, aspirations, and whole self above the trivialities of earth to set them on fire. These are valid pleas with Him. It cannot be that trust fixed on Him should be disappointed, nor that cries perpetually rising to His ears should be unanswer'd, nor that a soul stretching its tendrils heavenward should fail to find the living stay, round which it can cling and climb. God would be force of such appeals, and delights to be moved to answer, by the spreading before Him of His servant's faith and longings.

ABC. "The fulness and variety of these petitions demand a special consideration."

Notice:—

I. The invocation. They thus in these verses appear just that the Psalmist invokes God; and that by three several names: "Jehovah," "my God," "Lord." (1) "Jehovah." The word implies eternal, unchangeable, uncreated self-existence. It was given at the end of the covenant, as the ground of the great deliverance from Egyptian bondage. The national existence rested upon it. The vitality of Israel was guaranteed by the solemnity of Israel's God: (2) "My God." The word implies the absolute and fulness of power, and so may be found, and often is found, on the lips of heathens. It conveys the idea of the almighty rather than the moral attributes or covenant relations of God as the ground of our hope. This general conception becomes special to the Psalmist's hope by the title word which he prefixes to it: "my God." (3) The word "Lord" is not, as a naive English reader might suppose, the same word as that which is rendered "lord" in the first verse. That is "Jehovah." This means just what our English word "lord" means: it conveys the general idea of authority and dominion.

II. The petitions which are the verses given. They are all substantially the same, and they as they are, and how familiar all the aspects of the deliverance that the Psalmist desired were: (1) There is, first, the cry that God would hear, the basis of all that follows. And there is a vivid description of the process of deliverance: "I am weary," "my soul is weary." Then there is a longing for that which comes from the help, a
