When I was diagnosed with cancer, I was scared and confused. I didn't know what to expect, and I didn't know if I was going to survive. But one thing I did know is that I wanted to find a way to laugh about it.

Cancer is a terrible disease, but it's also full of absurdities. From the way it makes your hair fall out to the way it makes you crave the strangest foods, there's a lot of potential for humor in the cancer experience.

In this book, I share my own experiences with cancer, from the moment I was diagnosed to the day I finally finished treatment. I talk about the funny things that happened to me along the way, the weird things I learned, and the inspiring people I met.

I hope that this book will make you laugh, cry, and think. I hope that it will give you hope if you're facing cancer, and that it will help you to find the humor in your own experiences.
